ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many individuals have contributed their expertise, time, and resources to various areas of this project, and to them I am most grateful. I would first like to thank my primary thesis adviser, Jeff Kowalski, from whom I have learned so much, and who has helped me shape and focus every aspect of this project. By sharing with me his exceptional knowledge of the art and culture of the ancient Maya as well as the modern Maya of Yucatán, I have gained a unique understanding of this culture that will continue to inform my research in the future. Next, I am indebted to Barbara Jaffee, who helped me unravel and synthesize some very complex areas of Western art historical theory, practice, and methodology. As a mentor, she not only guided my learning but also helped me to become a more confident student and scholar. I am also indebted to Virginia Miller, who has greatly enhanced my knowledge of other world art traditions and their connection to art traditions in Yucatán. Her keen eye during the editing of the numerous drafts of this paper was deeply appreciated. I would also like to thank the faculty in the Art History Division who read early versions of this paper and offered their ideas, insight, and suggestions for further research based on their own fields of expertise. These early comments introduced me to a wealth of applicable information outside of my research area that helped to broaden my perspectives and ultimately produce a stronger and more thorough investigation.
